

The Silk Dress

There was a time long ago when the entire world revolved around a single oak tree. Its tall trunk rose into the air and above the surrounding valley, standing in solitude amongst the rolling fields of grass and brush. The wind ran its fingers across the branches, waving them happily in the air and playing over the bark like a softly tuned violin. The sun had hidden itself behind a distant mountain, but its light still shined across the sky in a brilliant red and orange glow. A swirling night sky existed on the opposite half of this spectacular light, spread long across its side of the heavens but not daring to intersect with the light. It was dotted with sparkling stars and an enormous full moon. A peaceful twilight had just fallen across the land, dewing the grass and opening a small window of opportunity for nature to take control on the environment once more.
